BE AWARE OF MOTORCYCLISTS ON THE ROAD AND GIVE THEM THE SPACE THEY NEED.

Whether you're a hobby rider, commuter, or long distance rider, riding a motorcycle is a popular way Albertan's travel. But motorcycle safety involves all road users. In a vehicle, a driver can feel invincible – on a bike, a rider is extremely vulnerable.

- Facts to Know:
- Motorcycles are less stable and less visible than cars and often have high-performance capabilities.
 - 3,247 motorcyclists were involved in casualty collisions over a 5-year period. These collisions resulted in 163 deaths and 3,356 injuries (2012-2016).
 - 46% of motorcyclists involved in casualty collisions committed an improper action. More than half of these errors were running off the road or following too closely (2012 – 2016).
 - Almost one-fifth of motorcyclists involved in casualty collisions were travelling at a speed too fast for the given conditions. In fatal collisions, four in ten motorcyclists were travelling at unsafe speeds (2012 – 2016).
 - More than two-thirds of collisions involving a motorcycle resulted in death or injury. This compares to approximately one in 10 for all collisions (2012 – 2016).
 - The younger the motorcyclist, the higher the collision rate. Motorcycle riders aged 16 to 17 years had the highest involvement rate per 1,000 licensed motorcyclists (2016).

Greener Childhood Associated with Happier Adulthood (part four—from npr.org)

The strength of the association between green space and risk of psychiatric disorder was similar to other factors known to influence mental health, like socioeconomic status. According to Engemann, it is estimated that about 20 percent of the adult Danish population will suffer from poor psychiatric health within any given year, making these slight changes in risk potentially important.

"Green space seemed to have an association that was similar in strength to other known influences on mental health, like history of mental health disorders in the family, or socioeconomic status," says Engemann. What's more, the effect of green space was "dosage dependent" — the more of one's childhood spent close to greenery, the lower the risk of mental health problems in adulthood.

Engemann cautions that the study does have limitations: "It's purely correlational, so we can't definitively say that growing up near green space reduces risk of mental illness." Establishing cause and effect for variables like these is incredibly difficult, according to Engemann.

Still, the breadth and depth of data used for this analysis add to the circumstantial evidence linking green space and mental health. "The effect is remarkable," says Lambert. "If we were talking about a new medicine that had this kind of effect the buzz would be huge, but these results suggest that being able to go for a walk in the park as a kid is just as impactful."

The greenery association with better mental health held across both rural and urban areas of Denmark. "You could grow up in very urban areas but still have reduced risk if you're surrounded by green spaces," says Engemann.

The study also can't address how different kinds of green space — and how people use it — affect mental health. Are forests more impactful than sparser park spaces? Do you need to actively use these spaces, or is simply growing up near greenery enough? These are questions Engemann hopes future studies can answer.
